"How To Win the War"

The United States has an oversupply of editors, columnists, publishers, pollsters and other self-appointed critics who are busy telling how to run the war. England and the United States have recently been subjected to a serious outbreak of these super critics.

If the propaganda machines of the Axis powers had worked overtime at devising schemes for demoralizing the democracies, they could not have chosen a better time nor have used better subject matter than that chosen by those who have set themselves up to tell how to win the war and to criticize the leadership of the United Nations.

If all these critics would devote their energy and time to really helping win the war it would be of great help. In probably the most boring hour facing the democracies it is extremely unfortunate that the leaders of the United Nations are now compelled to spend so much time answering their critics when the time of both the critics and the leaders should be spent in fighting the enemy.

The wave of criticism has not only had an evil effect on England and the United States but it is also well calculated to confuse and divide all the United Nations. The Axis has not only won naval and military victories in recent weeks but it has also won its greatest propaganda victory. When so many people in the democratic nations begin to say the very things that the Axis nations want them to say, that is a propaganda victory indeed.

As many leaders have said, this war is different in many respects from previous wars. For one thing our enemies are depending more on propaganda to win for them than ever before. Propaganda is the spearhead by which the Axis powers hope to break down all democratic nations. Axis leaders have made it plain that democratic nations are especially susceptible on this point because so many people can be found in democracies to say just what the Axis wants them to say.

There has never been any secret about how the Axis powers intend to work. They have been rather bold about how much they depend on critics and self-appointed advisors to break down the democracies. It was hard to believe at first that people in the democracies would do such a thing but the wave of criticism of leaders in the United States and England during the last few weeks is convincing evidence that the Axis powers can get a lot of help right among the democratic nations.

That the Axis leaders depend much on the help they can get inside America can be seen by the work of a Japanese submarine timed to occur during President Roosevelt's recent speech. The Japs know this would get dramatic headlines and would be worth a billion dollars in free advertising. They knew also it would start millions of Americans to authorizing their own naval and military leaders.

The critics and advisors on how to run the war say they are sincerely trying to help win the war when their methods are questioned. But sincerely only makes their work all the more dangerous. Hitler himself is very sincere, fanatically so. He will set himself up as a critic or adviser should remember that a lot of things other than sincerity are required to win a war.

Churchill and Roosevelt and all the leaders of the United Nations have been faced for some time with the serious problem of having to give up some part of the vast battle front covering land and sea. It can be said frankly there is no man this side of heaven who can foresee with certainty what is the best course at the present time.

But whatever course the leaders of the United Nations decide upon the critics and advisors on how to run the war can be counted on to start another wave of criticism that will be very pleasing to the Axis.

A sober second thought ought to convince any thinking person that many of the problems in the present war are somewhat beyond the grasp of human minds, hence any criticism of our leaders should be reduced to an intelligent minimum.

The uproar that came from the columnists, editors and other critics following the fall of Singapore is an example of how foolish all such criticism may be. The naval and military experts had said as much as they could about the probabilities of defending Singapore without just opening up all their plans to the Japs. Any columnist, editor, advisor or super critic who made an intelligent effort to follow the developments should have known pretty well what the plans were. Yet these advisors and critics sang their song for the Axis when the defeat came. The least that any American can do at the present time is to refuse to say what the Axis leaders want him to say.

These operations require an amount of effort proportional to  $\frac{1}{2}n(n+1)$ , but the constant is small, and it does not require any extra space. With reasonable memory,  $\frac{1}{2}n(n+1)$  is also little more than usually needed under the reasonable (and not unreasonable) assumption that much of it is applied to local storage, and all information is to be retained after it has been processed. Consequently, regarding the constant as the Chinese wall, it was necessary

THE proof of the Seeburg mechanism is in its performance! More than four years ago, Seeburg engineers took a chance on the assembly line and set it up for a "backdawn test." Since that time—with just ordinary care, such as cleaning, lubricating and replacing six inexpensive parts due to wear, this Seeburg mechanism has been running night and day. This performance is all the more remarkable when you consider that a mechanism running continuously is under a much greater strain than one which runs intermittently. The Seeburg phonographs you operate have years of good, dependable service still left in them . . . they have the FINEST MECHANISMS IN AUTOMATIC MUSIC. The Seeburg Mechanism Will Do Its Job—But You Must Also Do Yours! More than ever before, take good care of your phonographs, service them often and give them good general maintenance . . . that is asking for very little for a Seeburg Phonograph that offers so much! Your local Seeburg Distributor maintains a complete Seeburg Service Department under the personal supervision of a factory-trained technician. He is always ready to help you on all service problems.
